Selected Essays in Electronic Recordkeeping in Australia is a collection of writings of individuals who have not only thought long and hard about what we called the ‘electronic records problem’, but who are addressing the practical solutions that need to be put in place.

The authors represent a broad cross-section of thinkers and practitioners from across Australia. They take as their guide the standardised approach to recordkeeping developed in Australia in the mid 1990s. They provide the background and advice needed by those seeking to implement this standard approach.

The aim of this publication is to assist recordkeepers and information managers from large corporations through to smaller collecting institutions about how to approach the electronic recordkeeping world.
